

INFILTRATORS AND SABOTEURS:

A guide on identifying people trying to manipulate, or impose their will on you

While historically Brown Berets have had a history of dealing with Infiltrators, or Law Enforcement, it is just as, if not more destructive dealing with SABOTEURS.

A Saboteur, acting alone for self-aggrandizing purposes is concerned only with themselves, their ego, and their lack of personal accomplishment/fulfillment in their personal life. They may be posturing constantly, trying to gratify their own morally bankrupt agendas – trying to coax sexual favors out of subordinates, and order other subordinates to inflict violence on their detractors.

They will cowardly do all of this, while spreading unproven slander and libel about their detractors over the internet, and via telephone.

Saboteurs are cowardly, jobless types, who can seldom turn a screw, hammer a nail, dig a ditch, or look after themselves, so they groom the only skill they have; Their mouth. This individual has likely conned, coaxed and intimidated people with their mouth alone (as so many avaricious salespersons can be prone do to) their whole lives, and may in fact be quite good at it.

The saboteur will gain the trust of sometimes more naïve hearts – or people unskilled in “reading” people. The saboteur is a little like a watered-down version of a cult leader, and will gain trust through indulgence of one’s personal weaknesses, triumphs, tragedies, and quandaries. Once they have established your trust in them, they will proceed to move onto the manipulations, asking or demanding favors, regardless of how outrageous, outlandish, or inappropriate.

The saboteur, creates divisiveness, paranoia, hostility, etc among their detractors and among organizations.

The good news about saboteurs is that they tend to be lazy cowards. Because of their cowardly laziness, one would be hard pressed to find a saboteur in the flesh on their doorstep, ready to spill blood over differences. The bad news is that instead, a saboteur is content to try to embolden others to attack, commit violence, etc. Chances are this person is well-accustomed to freeloading off of others, and long dreamt of being able to delegate orders of violence.

Traits of a saboteur

(Usually, a saboteur goes great length to position themselves, so these are likely more easily identified in someone carrying or posturing toward a leadership position.)

- Those who give subordinates standing orders to have others assaulted, or killed.
- Those who often talk about taking out “hits” on people they consider detractors. If the individuals they are referring to are Raza, that has done no discernible wrong then this is a big red flag, since we’re here to serve and fortify Raza.
- Treats divergent opinions as insolence; Remember, this individual is threatened by anyone who questions them or their motives or accountability. Once you do this, you are no longer in their good graces.
- Rants about their delusional concepts of assembling a private army.
- Continually and repeatedly meddles in the private lives of others – always pressing others for information on the private lives of others, and deliberately planting inferences to test the water and gain more trust/leverage.
- Limiting contact among people, isolating others, and behaving as the only conduit of information. This not only creates a lack of transparency, but also makes it easier for the saboteur to mislead and steer people wrong. All the saboteur has to do, is say the orders came from the top, and it is believed.
- Spreading unproven, completely false misinformation campaigns, whisper campaigns, etc. The saboteur will deliberately tell the most grandiose lies about a detractor, both through abuse of telephone and internet, as well as spreading misinformation with the general public.

Dealing with such swine:

One must prepare one’s self for dealing with saboteurs – often, you will have no one or few people in your corner, advocating for you. You must keep your head up, stay strong and consistent. Time and track record prove all things. Eventually, everyone gets tired of the saboteur and moves on, just as the saboteur looks on to newer prospects to exploit.

Communicate, communicate, communicate. The saboteur parasite relies on the average persons’ complacency. Often, no one will really know just how many bridges have been burned, how many people intimidated or victimized, or divided. If enough people communicate, without fear, others will also and be able to subdue the saboteur’s actions.

This model often works with pedophiles and child molesters, who ALSO rely on shadowy actions, and lack of communication.